Acting with professionals

Stars for a day

Cabrillo students had a chance to act with professionals last week when performers from the Los Angeles Music Center came out to entertain and educate the classes with renditions of poems and stories.

Don Sparks, Candy Danzig and Niche Saboda — the three actors who make up the group "We Tell Stories" — performed poems like Lewis Carroll's "Jabberwocky" and Howard Pyle's "How Trouble Came to be in the World."

The three actors gave entertaining, fast-paced and modern versions of the classics, conscious of keeping their young audience's attention at all times.

They wore bright-colored sweatsuits and came with a trunk full of props, which, coupled with the enthusiastic flavor of the performances, kept the students' eyes riveted to the stage.

The point of the performances, Sparks told the children, was to get them acquainted with literature and, hopefully, inspire them to read the stories and poems for themselves.

The younger classes saw simpler stories early in the morning, while the fourth, fifth and sixth graders enjoyed a second, more advanced production later.

The raucous outdoor performance for the older classes was complicated, but not deterred by a light rain that gradually grew heavier and forced the audience and performers to move to cover.

The actors had no trouble rounding up recruits from the audience to participate. During "Jabberwocky" the acting troupe even managed to get the hundred or so pupils to whistle and sneeze in unison.

Like the three professionals, fourth graders Aaron Evans and Alison Douglas seemed oblivious to the light showers as they followed through with their parts, calling for them to lie down on the rain-soaked pavement.

Kostas Vitakis, another fourth grader, was also a good sport as he rode on Spark's shoulders, playing his part and managing to shelter the actor from some of the rain at the same time.

The second poem, a Carl Sanberg invention about two skyscrapers who had a child, was moved to the overhang between the school's two wings, much to the relief of the teachers, actors, and probably even the students.

There Sparks coached the students for their roles.

"You guys are together, so it's kind of like you're married," he told sixth graders Tiffany Atwell and Danny Switzer, much to their chagrin and the audience's relish. The two played shoppers and they were instructed to walk across the stage through the streets of the city of Liver and Onions on cue.

Although the students' parts were simple, they had to learn to follow cues, use props and a few even had a line or two to speak.

Atwell admitted later that she had been nervous while on stage. Although she had never acted before, she said she had enjoyed it and planned to do it again.

On the other hand, Switzer said this was old hat to him, having acted in his church plays for a number of years.

"I'd like to go on to bigger and better (things), like movies and things like that," the youngster said.

In "How Trouble Came to be in the World," a story about a being named "Trouble" who followed an unlucky man around until he managed to sic Trouble on the kingdom's queen instead, sixth grader Heather Jenkins got to wear a white beard and utter the lines, "Beat it, big nose."

"You mean, I'll never see my cabbage patch doll again?" Saboda asked in response to the news that he was banished from the kingdom. The modern, even fashionable, touch brought understanding laughs from the audience.

Sixth graders Mark Ventrella and John Stewart donned black curly wigs and carried imitation caveman clubs to beat on one of the characters.

The young actors and audience alike seemed to enjoy their PTA-sponsored break from regular classes. Cabrillo school is one of seven Upland elementary schools to take advantage of the Los Angeles Music Center's education division tour program.

Earlier this year the Upland School District became a member of the center's foundation, allowing its schools to take advantage of the various performances at a reduced rate.

Upland writer sets goals

By Suzanne Sproul

Whenever an idea hits Pat Almazan, she writes it down on whatever she has available — scraps of paper, even restaurant paper napkins.

And when the Upland woman returns to her spacious home, she tries to write story outlines from the ideas. She files them in her small, but cozy office upstairs in her house. She has 150 story lines now on file.

Almazan is an aspiring short story mystery writer and she is encouraged in her efforts by her husband, Joe.

When she's not formulating character personalities or settings, she's trying to help others write.

She is the president of the Pomona Valley Writer's Club; a member of the National League of American Pen Women Inc.; and a member of Mystery Writers of America.

"I decided if I was going to be a writer I better associate myself with other writers to gain their knowledge and insight. If an idea comes, I write them down. Sometimes I think of an ending for a story and I work the story around it. And then, other times I can write the story but I get stuck with the ending," she said with a smile.

She currently is working on a short story about the intrigue involved with a heart recipient and the mysterious way the Parks assessment issue ready to heat up again in R.C.

By Marianne Aiken

An issue that city officials think should be dead by now is about to heat up again, eight months after the Rancho Cucamonga City Council approved the formation of a parks assessment district.

Six-thousand, seventy-three people signed their names to a petition protesting the $34.67 assessment which showed up on October tax bills for owners of single-family homes in the assessment district.

The Cucamonga Citizens Coalition (CCC-PAC), a political action committee protesting the assessments, is asking that the city put a measure on the June 4 ballot requiring all assessments to be subject to a two-thirds vote of the public.

The petitions, presented to the City Clerk Jan. 16, are being evaluated by city attorney James Markman for their validity.

Red Hill and Heritage parks are at the center of the controversy.

Parks always have been a hot issue in the city. At its first meeting on Dec. 7, 1977, the City Council passed an emergency parks dedication ordinance.

"This whole process of long-term capital financing of parks has been going on since incorporation eight years ago," said William Holley, Rancho Cucamonga community services director.

City Council members have fumed over the issue, protesters say the city is not listening, and city administrators say they don't understand all the controversy over what is — to them — a beneficial project.

"It's frustrating to see this issue malingering on when we are trying to work towards positive goals in the community," Holley said.

The city's general plan sets forth a target level of parkland in the city — 5 acres for every 1,000 people.

But under 1983 revisions to the state's subdivision map act, also called the Foran bill, developers are only required to provide three acres of open public space for every 1,000 people in a planned complex.

The Foran bill is not the only recent piece of state legislation to affect the parks issue in Rancho Cucamonga.

Conflicts between the city and developers over providing parkland came to a head in 1984 when Ralph Lewis of Lewis Homes, a major developer in the city, helped draft a revision to the state's Landscaping and Lighting Act.

The bill, drafted on Lewis Homes company stationery, would have kept local governments from forcing developers to build public parks as part of their housing projects.

Lewis was chairman of a Senate advisory panel on land use at the time he worked on the bill.

Lewis later backed down and worked out a compromise with the city.

Under the auspices of the revised Landscape and Lighting Act, the City Council was able to create the disputed assessment district May 17, 1985, following a series of public workshops and a public hearing attended by about 750 people.

Later, the council authorized the sale of $7.3 million in bonds at its Nov. 6 meeting.

A superior court judge ruled last year that the process for creating the assessment district was legal.

The city requested the judgement to assure bond purchasers that there would be no future legal challenge to the bond issue.

CCC-PAC challenged the

'Save a Sweetheart' campaign slated

By Matt Coker

Posters appearing very similar to full-page magazine advertisements for cigarettes are going up at Rancho Cucamonga high schools the next few weeks.

The point of the messages is not to encourage smoking, but just the opposite.

Through a grant from the county's public health department and the American Heart Association's San Bernardino chapter, the Chaffey Joint Union High School District is starting a program called "Save a Sweetheart."

The program, which is being piloted at Alta Loma and Etiwanda high schools, will include weeks of blowing verbal smoke in students' faces on the evils of cigarette smoking.

The activity will culminate in a quasi-Great American Smoke-Out Day. But rather than being held in November, like the nationwide smoke-out, Save a Sweetheart will tie in with St. Valentine's Day.

Well, sort of, anyway. Valentine's Day and the observance of Abraham Lincoln's birthday are both Feb. 14 this year, the latter being a national holiday. Since there will be no school that day, Save a Sweetheart will be held Feb. 13.

Student smokers will be asked to quit smoking for a day. Non-smokers will be urged to sign pledges resembling valentines, swearing they will not start smoking for at least two years.

Ron Nakamura of the county's public health department said the point of Save a Sweetheart is to "combat the advertising of cigarettes as glamorous and positive. We're fighting fire with fire."

Cigarette companies spend about $800 million a year on advertising, according to the American Heart Association. During the campaign, non-smoking will be presented as the "in thing," Nakamura said.

Students trained about the dangers of tobacco will speak to their classmates, and posters

Interest in creating cultural center in R.C. seems to grow

By Marianne Aiken

It looks like the new civic center in Rancho Cucamonga is going to be more than just an office building.

Interest in building a cultural center as part of the civic center complex is heating up as city officials contemplate coordinating the design of the new civic center with a proposed cultural center.

Buildings for a civic center and public safety facility are planned for the intersection of Haven Avenue and Foothill Boulevard.

The design of the civic center is still unsettled, but it will probably influence the appearance of the cultural center if that project gets off the ground.

The City Council last Wednesday directed the city staff to get John W. Francis, a La Habra attorney who specializes in establishing non-profit corporations, working on the three-to six-month-long process of setting up a non-profit foundation to generate funds for the cultural center and a planned 99-acre city park.

Francis estimated it would cost "not more than $2,000" to set up the foundation.

"We've had a number of people express interest in contributing money to build a cultural center," said City Manager Lauren Wasserman. "It's a pretty clean, nice approach to community involvement."

If a non-profit foundation were established, donors could write off their contributions to the cultural center and receive a tax deduction, Wasserman said.

Councilman Chuck Buquet said the City Council should select a committee to plan the cultural center, and suggested Jeanne Barton, president of Professional Data Computers, Inc., to head the committee.

Barton said she would accept the position if it was offered.

"This is something that I have been interested in and I would be accepting that position," Barton said. "I hope we would be affecting something that would not take ten years to do. We know enough people in the city and county on an influential basis that would be willing to invest on a cultural level. I think I could be very effective in it."

Barton is married to James Barton of Barton Development Co.

The five City Council members will be submitting four names of people to be appointed to the 20-member "blue ribbon" committee suggested by Buquet.

There was a lot of disagreement Wednesday night among council members as to whether the committee members should represent different areas of the humanities, or whether they should be only business and industry leaders with experience in this kind of project.

Councilmembers will be submitting names from people who can be expected to donate money to the center, in addition to those whose contribution will be in ideas and energy.

County gets engineering award for law center

By Patrick McGreevy

A major engineering award has been given to San Bernardino County for its pioneering use of earthquake devices in the Foothill Communities Law and Justice Center in Rancho Cucamonga.

The building was named last week as the 1986 outstanding engineering achievement in Southern California by the regional branch of the American Society of Civil Engineers.

By winning the prestigious award, which last year went to the renovated Los Angeles International Airport, the county courthouse qualifies for the national competition.

The $38.9 million project was recognized for its "pioneering" use of base isolators which

Animal control officer likes pets, helping people

By Suzanne Sproul

Otis Braden leads somewhat of a dog's life.

He's been cussed at and even thrown off an elderly woman's porch.

Braden, who said he prefers to be called, "Otie, you know sort of like the dog in Garfield," is an animal control officer. A dogcatcher by any other name.

But the bespectacled, mild-mannered Braden doesn't fit into the stereotypical role of the dastardly dogcatcher sneaking around town ready to pounce on poor, defenseless animals.

Braden loves animals and has saved at least two dogs from possible extermination at the Upland Animal Shelter. The two, named "Flunky" and "Bunky," now make their home in the Braden residence.

"My job is to pick up any strays or unlicensed animals on the street. We take care of all animals. We've had dogs, cats, horses, cows, sheep and even rabbits," Braden said. "But if everyone would just put licenses on their animals, they would go straight home when we find them."

Braden also has captured, relocated and released his share of troublesome possums and skunks.

Licensed animals picked up by the animal control officers are returned to their homes at no charge to the owners.

which purposely look like cigarette ads will be hung around the campuses.

More than 3 million teen-agers continue to smoke as a result of peer pressure, other family members smoking or advertising, according to the association.

Actually, teen-age smoking is decreasing from where it once was, but, for the first time, there are higher rates of puffing among teen-age females than males, Nakamura said.

At the same time, lung cancer is on the rise among women, which, he said, is "an alarming correlation."

Chaffey Joint Union High School District campuses were chosen to pilot Save A Sweetheart because the district's homemaking classes have put a burning emphasis on anti-smoking, he said.

There is also a "very strong commitment from the superintendent on down to try to reverse or curb smoking in schools," Nakamura said.

Etiwanda and Alta Loma were picked because they are in the same city, but are both very different campuses. Alta Loma is one of the district's older schools, while Etiwanda only opened three years ago. Having both in one city is a good way to monitor the overall progress of the program, Nakamura said.

Rather than coming off as a drag, Save a Sweetheart may create some competition between the crosstown schools, which may battle to see who can come up with the most pledges, he said.

Though other district schools expressed interest in the program, Nakamura said, the county and the heart association "didn't want to overwhelm and then not be successful."

If Save a Sweetheart "goes over big," it will be introduced to two or three schools a year, said Dee Ann Miller, the district's consumer/vocational resource technician.

"We hope the kids, as they learn the various harms and effects healthwise, will take it home and educate their families," said Miller, who is coordinating the program with the county and the association.

At both campuses initially participating in Save a Sweetheart, home rooms will be surveyed to filter out the smokers from the non-smokers. But the schools are approaching the program differently.

Tony Grasso, Alta Loma's assistant principal in charge of the program there, said Save a Sweetheart will be geared toward students and staff members alike.

Alta Loma's student body officers will be providing the stop-smoking information to the students, he said.

At Etiwanda, it will be representatives from each home room class that will report the information to their classmates. About 55 Alta Loma students will have to be trained for the program, Nakamura said.

Remi Tremblay, Etiwanda's assistant principal in charge of the program, said he believes no other school "is putting forth the commitment we have — a financial commitment and a commitment of students to help pass the message out."

Smoking is a problem at Etiwanda, Tremblay said.

"It's one of the top two or three problems on any campus," he said, estimating that "a good 15 to 20 percent feel they have to go hide somewhere (and smoke). It's a continual battle for us."

However, there are few smokers on Etiwanda's staff, so not much emphasis will be put on getting school employees to quit, he said.

Tremblay was unsure whether Etiwanda's approach — using classroom representatives to drive the stop smoking message home — will work.

"We're asking freshmen and sophomores to be the teachers on this," he said.

Nakamura said the undercurrent of the intervention exercise is to get smokers to realize that if they can quit for one day, they can put their cigarettes out forever.

Save a Sweetheart emerged in Wisconsin during a three-year period at eight different high schools. While it is difficult to measure the effectiveness of such a program, Nakamura said basic results showed that Wisconsin's female students were more influenced by the campaign than the males.

"I'm not sure if there will be a way to measure the way our effort has been," Tremblay said, "but I know one thing — We'll feel good about making the effort."

Parks/

city's request for validation of the bond issue.

However, it decided it would be too costly to issue a legal challenge for every assessment district in the city. Instead the group opted for the initiative.

A section in an engineer's report submitted on the improvement district outlines one of the main sticking points of the controversy.

The report states that the Landscape and Lighting Act of 1972 means that "assessments are assigned to properties in proportion to the benefit that such properties receive."

The protest group says people who live far away from the proposed parks are being forced to pay for a facility they won't receive any benefit from.

There has been some confusion over the park assessment district boundaries, since the city's General Plan names a "three-mile radius" for park assessment districts, but the assessment district boundaries reach into the southeastern parts of the city.

The boundaries, as adopted by the City Council at its March 20, 1985 meeting, actually include the industrial specific plan area, broadening the boundaries past the oft-quoted three-mile radius.

Holley said the three-mile radius description is an "oversimplification" of the assessment district limits.

Michael Mahoney, leader of the CCC-PAC countered, "it is political terminology, used to imply that it's less than it is."

Mahoney also took issue with the city for what he called "tampering with Prop. 13."

Mahoney has stated that there are other ways to fund parks, but declined to give any examples.

"Between the time the city approves the document and the time of the election, we will be coming up with different alternatives," he said.

A long-term goal of the group is to outlaw assessment districts.

"Once it has proven itself as a viable means of financing, it can be used again and again and again," Mahoney said.

"Until we can get it reversed on a state level, we have to work locally on this. We're trying to close a loophole that was created by (Chief Justice of the Supreme Court) Rose Bird."

Holley said less than one percent of the homeowners in the assessment district protested when the district was first proposed.

"They were afforded the opportunity under the law and they didn't even have to show up (to the public hearing)," he said. "They could have sent in a letter and be counted as part of the opposition."

"We made ourselves available at his (Mahoney's) convenience any time he wanted to talk. We offer the same today. They haven't taken us up on it."

Another group involved in the parks issue is "People for Parks," not a political action committee, but a grass-roots group.

While People for Parks supports the city's actions, John Holt, a member of the group, said there is no way money can be raised for parks in a manner that's fair to everyone.

"If someone would like to say, 'is the assessment district 100 percent equitable to all citizens?' There are some areas that are not absolutely, positively equal," Holt said.

But "those inequities do not create undue hardships," he added. "The whole thing was done very professionally and I think it's a credit to our City Council."

R.C. citizens don't look forward to rock quarry

By Marianne Aiken

Citizens in Rancho Cucamonga are not looking forward to having an asphalt plant and rock crushing operation as next-door neighbors.

Dust, noisy trucks and the smell of asphalt in the air are not exactly what Etiwanda residents had in mind when they moved to the area, they said.

Their reaction of dismay followed the county's release last week of a draft environmental impact statement on the Day Creek Sand and Gravel Mining Operation.

The development, which has been described as a "quarry," also would include a concrete and asphalt plant below ground level, in addition to the mining operation.

Initially proposed April 8, 1985, by Fourth Street Rock Crushers, the project would be located on 485 acres of unincorporated county land 4,000 feet north of Highland Avenue, 1/4 mile east of Milliken Avenue, and one mile west of Etiwanda Avenue, extending north to the water and power right-of-way just below the city limits.

Three hundred acres surrounding the developed site, which will be leased, but not used, is recommended to be designated open space.

A public hearing on the environmental impact statement was held at 9 a.m. Tuesday in the Joshua Room of the new county building located at 385 N. Arrowhead in San Bernardino, on the first floor.

A period of public comment ends Feb. 5, to be followed by another hearing before the environmental review board Feb. 18.

These hearings will take place before the county Planning Commission acts to approve or reject the project.

Decisions of the planning commission are appealable to the county Board of Supervisors.

The Rancho Cucamonga City Council, the William Lyon Co., which is developing the 8,000-home Victoria planned community, and 20 Rancho Cucamonga residents and property owners already have gone on record opposing the project.

One resident of Victoria, which is located south of the proposed mining operation, said her family never would have moved there had they known about the quarry.

Alicia Ethridge, who has lived on Golden Rain Way in Victoria for 13 months, said she moved there from Long Beach thinking she was going to be getting away from the smog.

Instead, she said, she fears she again will be breathing polluted air because of the rock quarry.

"We all know about the air quality (here)," she said. "It's bad enough as it is. If the plant opens up, we will probably move."

"I think there's a lot of people who would not move here if they knew about it."

Liz Carr, who lives on Trillium Court, also in Victoria, said she's not only concerned about her 13-year-old daughter crossing the street and dealing with an expected 124 truck trips to the development each day, but also about slow-moving trucks blocking up traffic on Etiwanda roads.

"If you get one old lady on Base Line Road going 35, you get a pile-up," she said. "If you get a truck on there, everything's going to come to a halt."

Michael Vairin, director of administration and planning for The Deer Creek Company, a housing development west of the quarry site, said he is expecting that the project will "affect us more negatively than positively."

Deer Creek is the site of 146 homes in the $200,000 to $400,000 range, with 220 more homes planned, on 3/4- to 1-acre lots.

"There's a significant amount of residential (development) that's going to be proposed and built in the area," he said. "If you want to put it very simply, it's an incompatible land use. After you let the mining in, it's one thing after another."

Frederick Hinshaw, an environmental analyst at the capture unsuspecting critters, although a net and rope snares hang in the window of his truck.

The snares mainly are used to lasso cats or trapped animals not taking very kindly to the idea of being captured.

"You know, the image of the mean dogcatcher really doesn't bother me. People are going to think what they want. All we can do is try and set a good example," he said with a shrug of his shoulders.

In his long career, Braden has never been bitten by a dog, but he's been clawed by countless fussy felines.

"When we used to go into people's attics — we can't do that anymore — to find wild animals, I found a cornered possum once. I tried to grab him and he started to run. He did a tap dance on my head and I thought, oh boy, I'm going to lose my ears. I lost my glasses in that tussle. They fell into the insulation in the attic and it took me a half an hour to find them," he said with a laugh.

Braden said he has loved animals most of his life. He started off with an eye toward pursuing a law enforcement career, but changed his mind.

"I had a background in law enforcement, but I didn't want to go the police route. This job seemed to fit," he said.

Although he always has a friendly pat and kind word for animals at the shelter, Braden said it's his responsibility to help protect the public and the animals.

"I would never just let one go. There's a reason for me picking them up. Many times they're injured and we take them to the veterinarian — and we've taken a lot of them home," he said.

"When we take a dog back to an owner, especially to an elderly person — you know in some cases the dog is their whole life — I'm tickled pink," he said.

And then there's the tougher side of the job. Braden and his fellow animal control officer must help dispose of dead animals and, in many cases, inform owners about the deaths. "I went to tell one woman that we found her dog. She ran out of her house toward my truck, saying you found him. I told her it had been hit by a car. She asked if he was OK. I told her it was dead," Braden said.

Venetian Room

It wasn't renovated in a day

There's an old joke about how many psychiatrists it takes to change a light bulb. The answer is only one, but the lightbulb really has to want to change.

Over at the Sycamore Inn, someone could have made a joke about how many people it takes to put together a chandelier without any instructions.

The answer is two, but you have to give them a photograph.

That's the story of how the new Venetian Room at the Sycamore Inn in Rancho Cucamonga came about.

It all started when Verne Hinrichsen and his wife Gertrude, owners of the historical restaurant on Foothill Boulevard, were on a trip to Venice, Italy.

"I made up my mind I wasn't going to buy anything," said Verne Hinrichsen while showing off the new room at the Inn last week.

But Hinrichsen was unable to keep his resolution once he saw a crystal chandelier made of hundreds of individual pieces of blue and red hand-blown glass.

He bought the thing and brought it home to be the centerpiece of a new, upstairs private dining room at the 138-year-old restaurant, creating an old Italian theme.

"Luckily somebody took two to three good photographs of it when it was in the factory," Hinrichsen said.

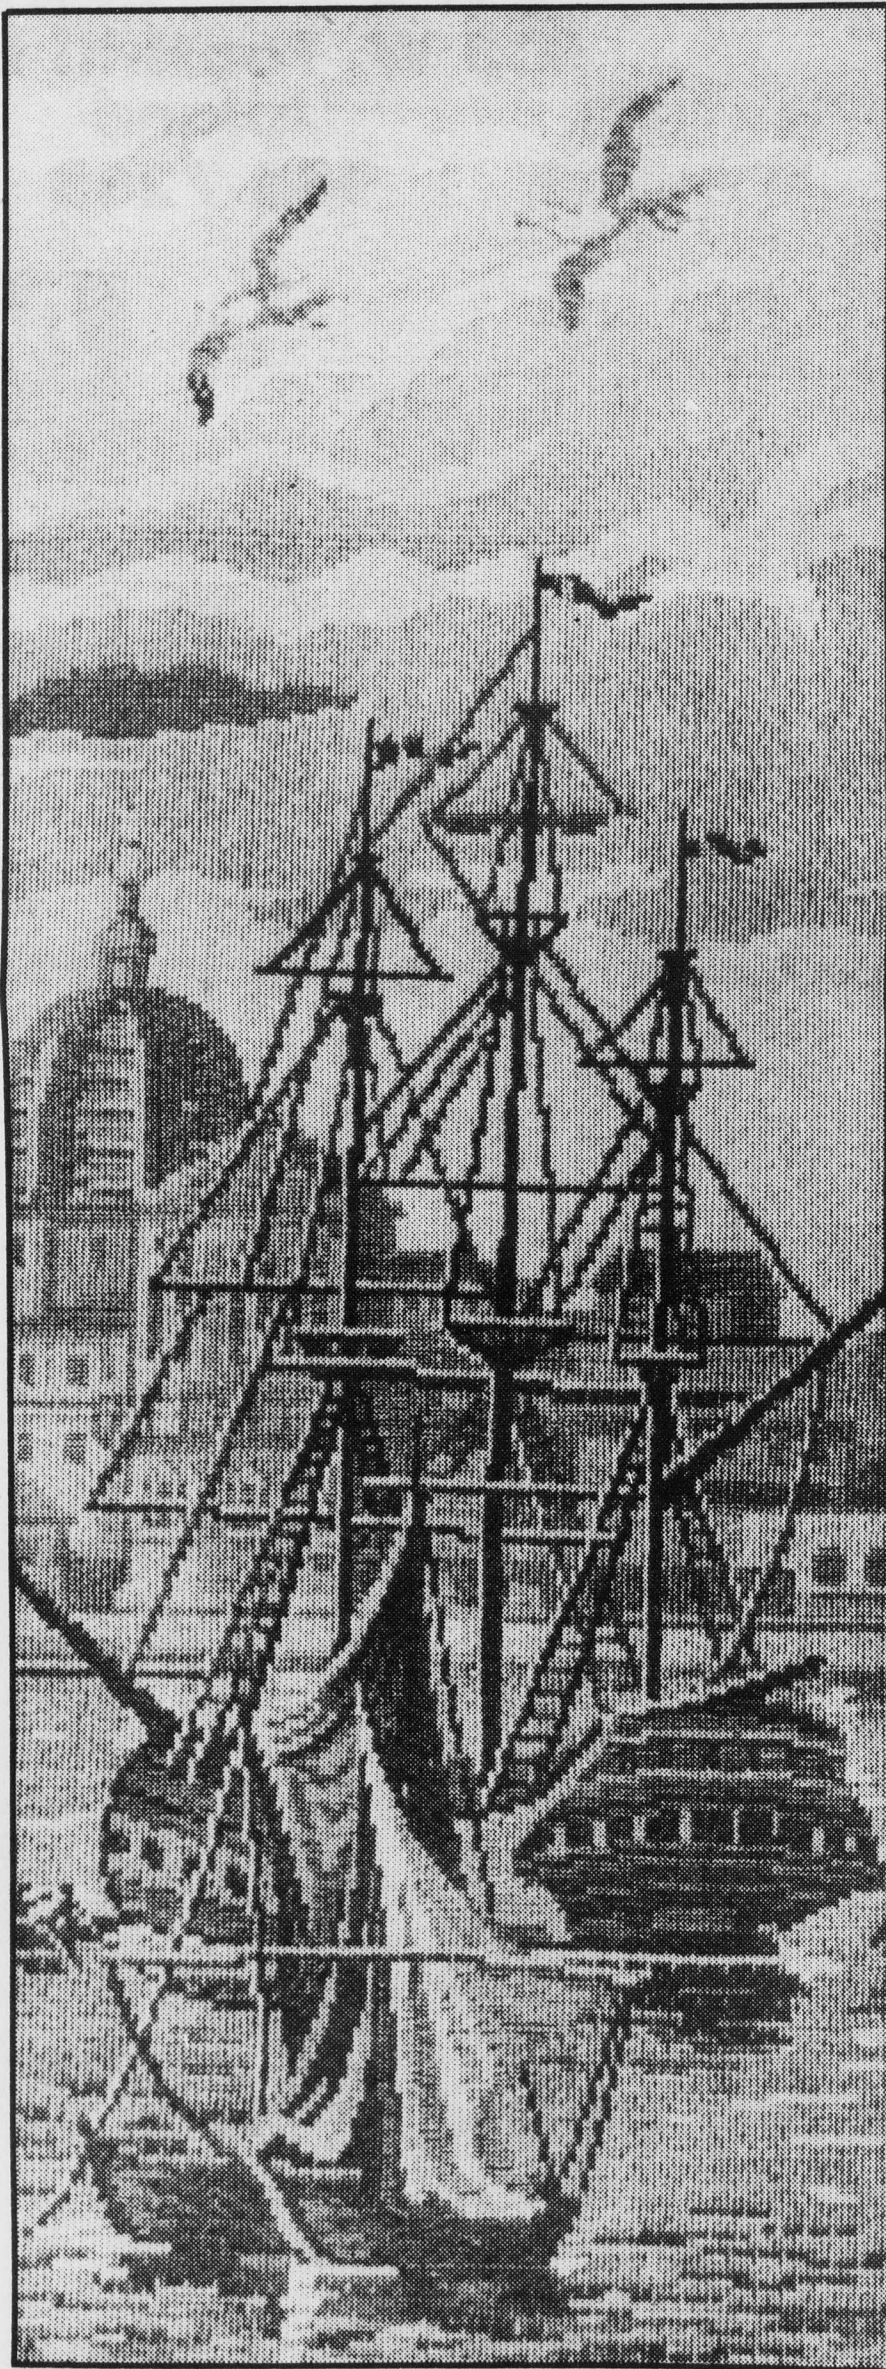

He and his son, Dane, who is the restaurant's manager, assembled the chandelier based on the photographs.

Gertrude Hinrichsen first separated all the pieces, sorting out all the ones that looked alike and putting them next to each other.

They put it together in one day.

"He's a perfectionist," Hinrichsen said of her husband.

Every detail of the room — from the silverware to the light fixtures — bears out the old Venetian theme.

While many of the accoutrements in the room are imported, there are some American-made items, like linens from Georgia.

Ironically, the items that came from overseas are installed in their proper places, while the Hinrichsens are still waiting for the American linen.

"I hate to say it, but that's why this country is running out of money," Hinrichsen said.

The newly decorated room holds 28-30 people, and has hosted several 50th wedding anniversary parties since it opened in December after a year-long redecoration.

Louis XV chairs from Italy, with cloth seats woven in Belgium, adorn the dining room table.

"They had to have it woven because they didn't have enough of it in Italy," Hinrichsen said.

Another inspiration for the Italian theme in the room is the restaurant's Italian chef, Luigi Parrella.

"We kind of had it decorated for him," Hinrichsen said.

"He and my husband are like that," added Gertrude Hinrichsen, crossing her fingers.

Sidights on the walls are silk-screened. They came from Italy, but the Hinrichsen's bought them here.

New, 100 percent wool carpeting in the room was woven in England and is comparable in quality to the motion picture lobby-style carpeting prominent in the '40s, Hinrichsen said.

A tapestry hanging on the wall shows a harbor in Venice and is a copy of a large English oil painting.

It would appear that to enjoy a true Italian meal, one must be prepared to consume a lot of wine.

The Venetian Room table is set with four different wine glasses in graduated sizes at each place setting.

The Hinrichsens explained that the smaller wine glasses at the right side of the row of glassware placed above the knives are for "lesser" wines, white wines that go with appetizers.

As the meal progresses, higher quality wines are brought out until the fourth glass is filled with a full-bodied red wine.

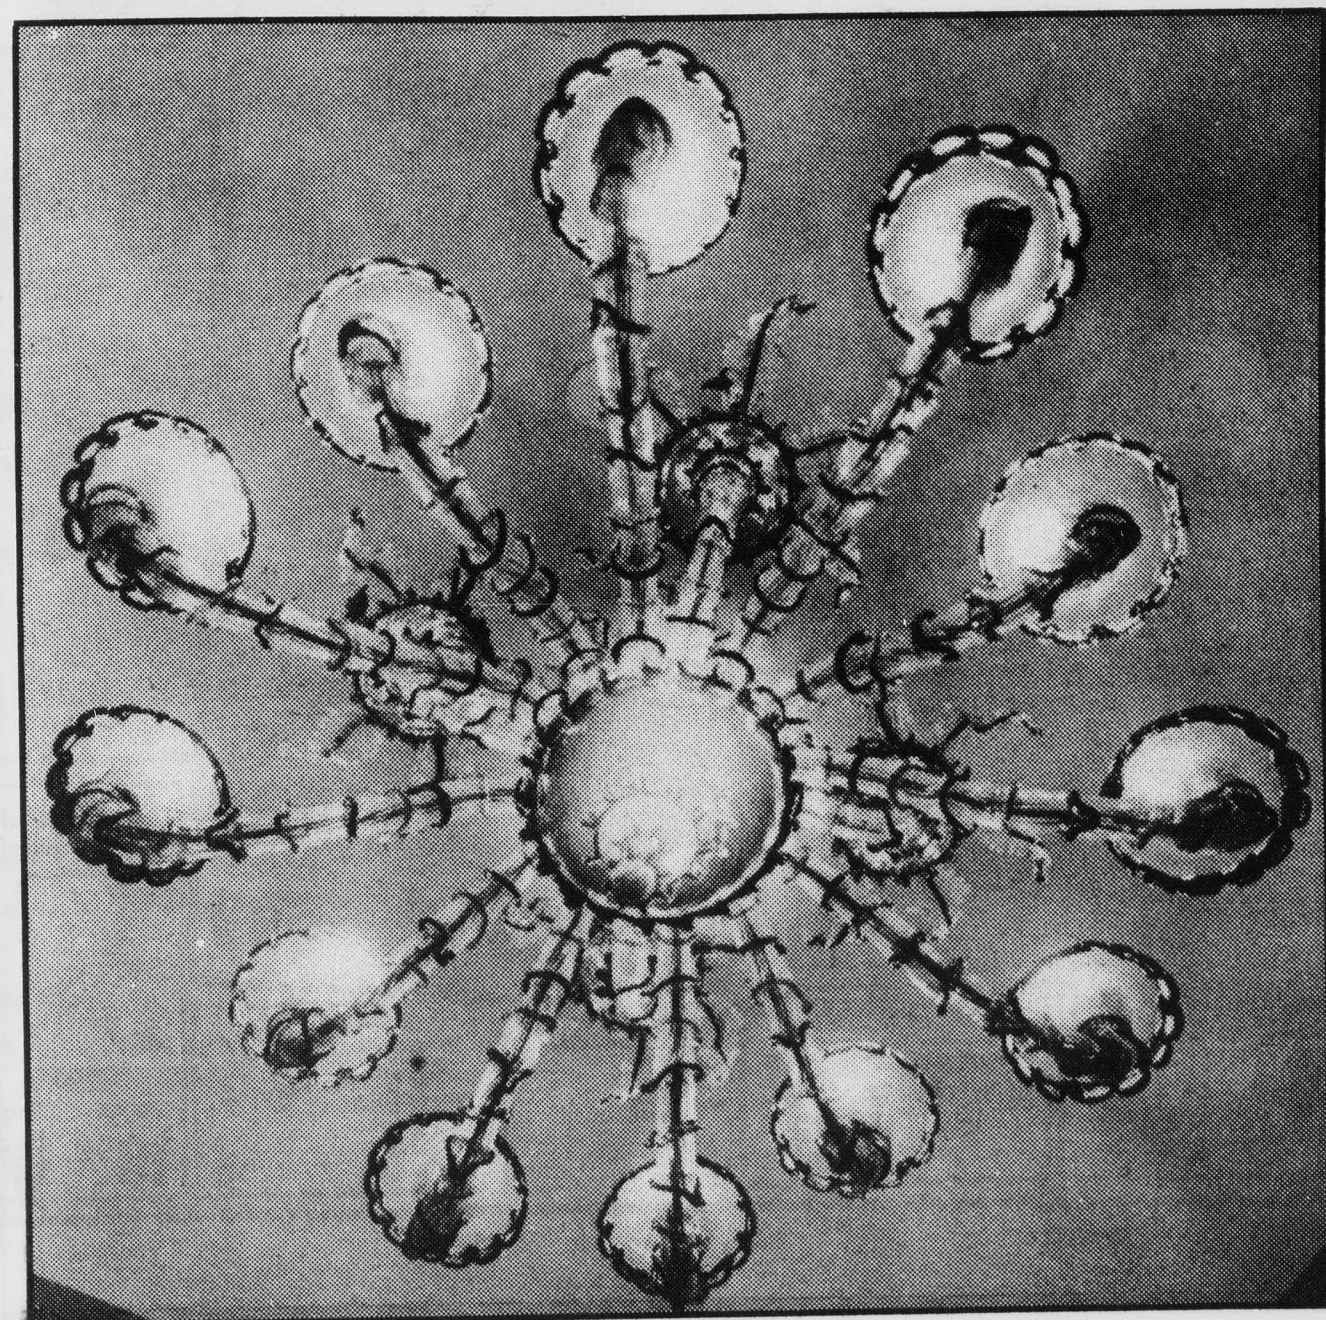

Dessert wines end the meal, but the dessert wine glasses are not brought out until after-dinner goodies appear.

Diners in the Venetian Room choose what they want to eat before the party.

"We prepare whatever they want," Hinrichsen said.

With the old Italian theme, one would think that some of the items in the room are antiques, but that's not so.

"I'm the only antique here," Hinrichsen said.

cushion the building against the shock of earthquakes, according to Richard Corneille, engineer and director of operations for Metcalf and Eddy, Inc., the main contractor on the courthouse project.

The expense of the base isolators has been controversial but one of the foremost proponents of the devices said Monday that the major award vindicates the county's decision to install them.

County Supervisor Cal McElwain said that although the isolators added more than $1 million to the cost of the project, that is a good price if human lives are saved during an earthquake.

"I put it in terms of if that place is full of people during an earthquake, whether one person or hundreds, they (isolators) will be worth every penny," McElwain said.

McElwain, who represents the Second Supervisorial District including Upland and Rancho Cucamonga, was chairman of the Board of Supervisors when the decision was made to include the isolators.

"I think it (the award) is great," McElwain said.

The Regional Outstanding Civil Engineering Achievement Award is given to the best example of engineering in a large area including Orange, Ventura, San Bernardino, Riverside, Santa Barbara and Los Angeles counties, said Corneille, who is vice president for the engineers association.

"The basis for the award is 'an engineering project that demonstrates the greatest engineering skills, and represents the greatest contribution to civil engineering progress and mankind,'" he said.

In presenting the likeness of the award plaque to the county Board of Supervisors, Corneille read a letter from the presidents of the local branches of the engineers association.

The letter said, in part, "It is truly refreshing that a public agency will take the initiative to recognize a new concept, such as the base isolation method, which insulates the structure and thus the people and contents within from earthquake forces."

He predicted that the building off Haven Avenue has a very good chance of winning the national engineering competition.

The four-story justice center, scheduled for completion in April, is the first U.S. building and the largest building in the world, to use base isolation, Corneille said.

county office of land management said about 165 letters were mailed out on the project to agencies, land owners, and individuals who either attended an environmental hearing, wrote in during the notice of preparation period, or who asked to be on the distribution list.

Hinshaw said the Feb. 18 environmental review board hearing following the conclusion of the period of public comment will determine the adequacy of the environmental impact report.

He said the county has received a response from the Soil Conservation Service, part of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which says there are no controversial items in the report as far as soil conservation is concerned, and that there are no prime farm lands involved.

The draft environmental impact report released last week stated that the project would have unavoidable impacts on air quality, the area's biology, land use planning and traffic.

Norman Johnson Jr., the president of Fourth Street Rock Crushers, said his company is drafting a response to the county which might answer some of the concerns about the impact.

The company paid $45,000 for the report.

The development would be inconsistent with land use compatibility provisions of the county and the city of Rancho Cucamonga general plans, the report stated.

Having a rock quarry to look at instead of the canyons and mountainside that now are visible to the north was one of the most unpleasant aspects Etiwanda residents mentioned.

The report also echoes residents' concerns about traffic.

"Slow-moving trucks would enter and exit the site at Highland Avenue, posing potential safety problems and causing inconvenience to drivers," the report states. An estimated 3,600 tons of aggregate will be mined each day at the site.

To help the traffic situation, the report suggests that a left turn lane be installed on Highland Avenue at the access road to the quarry and that stop signs be placed at the intersection.

Another potential impact explored in the report is noise.

"With the exception of noise from skip loaders, noise levels are not expected to be significant at the property lines of the site," the report stated.

But it went on to state that residential development is not planned near the property lines.

PERMANENT HAIR REMOVAL

Computerized
Electrolysis • Thermolysis • Blend
Susan Smith, Registered Electrologist

Unwanted hair can be safely removed from any part of the body by electrolysis, with the exception of the nostrils and inner ears. Eyebrows can be shaped, the upper lip "cleared", ugly chin hair removed, hairlines reshaped, the bikini line defined comfortably and efficiently.

Best results are achieved with a planned program. Treatments are usually 15 to 60 minutes per week and continue until the area is completed. Then, only a general clean-up may be necessary once or twice a year. New hair growth depends on each individual's glandular pattern.

Possibility of new R.C. library studied

By Marianne Aiken

If everyone in Rancho Cucamonga wanted to check out a library book at the same time, there wouldn't be enough to go around.

There are only 40,000 books in the city's branch library for 65,000 residents, Councilwoman Pam Wright said last Wednesday night, "and most of them are paperbacks."

There may be good news for bookworms sometime in the future, though.

San Bernardino County administrators were asked two weeks ago by Supervisor Cal McElwain to begin studying the possibility of building a second branch library in the city of Rancho Cucamonga, and the city wants to get in on the ground floor of any plans the county might have of building a new library in the city.

Council members last Wednesday called the county's interest "a step forward."

"The library is a vital part of a community that treasures and values its children," Wright said. "I hope that we will put it on the front burner instead of the back burner."

"We'd all agree the library services we have here are inadequate," Councilman Chuck Buquet added.

Councilman Dick Dahl proposed trying to get the county to help pay for a proposed cultural center by locating the library in the cultural center near the planned civic center at Haven Avenue and Foothill Boulevard.

"To build a free-standing library would be a pretty expensive proposition for the county," Dahl said last Friday. "I'd like to see a larger library, but it could be part of the cultural center itself.

"If the same amount of money could be put into the creation of the cultural center, it would give us a step up in funding the entire cultural center."

"It would allow us to build something larger, with a multi-use facility," he said.

A Haven Avenue location east of Base Line Road, which is the planned site of a 99-acre park, has been proposed for the second library.

Buquet said he wanted to see the library located close to where people live, as the city's population shifts to the east.

"To me, the library should be a convenience to the citizens, to the residential sector of the community," Buquet said.

The current county branch library located at 9191 Base Line Road is 11 years old and was built when the city had less than half its current population.

Cocaine treatment clinic to open in Upland

By Patrick McGreevy

Upland will be the home of a new clinic to treat dependency on cocaine.

Increased use of the drug has led the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors to give a $50,000 contract to a prestigious Beverly Hills drug treatment center to open an office in the West Valley next month.

The Matrix Center, which has treated many entertainment industry figures at its present office for three years, will open a drug treatment center at 715 N. Mountain Avenue, according to John Fitzgerald, coordinator of the new office.

"Cocaine abuse has just gone wild, not only in San Bernardino County but generally throughout the country," according to Bill Shalhoub, the county's chief of alcohol and drug abuse programs.

Shalhoub and Fitzgerald agree that the high-tech and high-paying industries springing up in the West Valley make the new clinic's location ideal.

"I would guess that judging by the building going on around Upland and the type of industry that's going in, you can expect a high percentage of highly strung, hard-working, ambitious people. That seems to be where the cocaine bug strikes most," Fitzgerald said.

Added Shalhoub, "We're hoping people who have a job and have enough money but are blowing it all away on coke will recognize that they have a serious problem and take advantage of this program."

Shalhoub said that although the expense of cocaine often limits its use to those in the middle class or higher, the $50,000 county allocation will allow all classes of people to have access to the program.

The county money will be used to subsidize treatment of poorer individuals who will be charged for treatment on a sliding scale depending on their income, Fitzgerald said.

He said the Upland clinic will also maintain a private practice for local residents with insurance.

"Most insurance programs cover this kind of treatment," he said.

Although cocaine abuse is prevalent among professionals such as engineers and lawyers, Fitzgerald said the drug has crossed over into other segments of society, such as the youth culture.

Fitzgerald said that presently several students at the Claremont Colleges are commuting for treatment at the Beverly Hills clinic.

Drug treatment has existed for several years at the main county clinic on Mt. Vernon Avenue in San Bernardino but Shalhoub said the treatment program is general and addresses all drugs.

The Matrix Center is a cocaine-specific program whose founder, clinical psychologist Richard Rayson, is nationally recognized. In fact, Rayson has an article on cocaine abuse treatment in this month's issue of Atlantic Monthly, the national magazine.

"I've known Dr. Rayson for several years and I have a lot of confidence in his method of treatment," Shalhoub said.

Unlike most cocaine treatment programs which use an Alcoholics Anonymous approach involving group meetings for support, Rayson's approach is "neurobehavioral."

Rayson's treatment program makes people dependent on cocaine aware of the behavior that feeds their dependence.

By making people aware of their psychological and physiological response to cocaine, and the social setting which most triggers the use, Rayson allows people to control their setting to stay away from the drug.

The Matrix Center program involves daily meetings with the user to help get through the withdrawal period, Fitzgerald said.

Shi Li Hua is spending her time sitting in on Upland High classes to learn more about the American school system.

This exchange teacher wants to learn system

By Suzanne Sproul

Shi Li Hua wants to learn about the American school system by observing Upland High School students.

The Americanized version of her name is Shirley, and she is an exchange teacher from the People's Republic of China. She is participating in the Upland chapter of the American Field Service.

"I'm so happy to be here. This is a golden chance for me to improve my knowledge of English," said the petite 30-year-old teacher.

Hua will be spending the next six months sitting in on English classes at Upland High School. She said she hopes to eventually become familiar enough with this country and local students to show them videotapes of her country and her school.

"First I want to try and understand English and this country better. I want to observe. Once I get used to it maybe I can introduce something about

Chamber, Upland High School form liaison

By Kimberly Heinrichs

The Upland Chamber of Commerce and the Upland High School have formed a liaison to benefit the school's academic program.

At a breakfast meeting Friday, a representative from the state Chamber of Commerce outlined its program, called Project

Business and Education Together (BET), to local chamber members.

That partnership program between business leaders and the schools is an action program, designed to get the business community involved in the workings of education, chamber Executive Director Tony Malone said.

Such involvement could take the form of classroom lectures, tours of businesses, mentor programs, career counseling and summer employment.

Carol Abbott, assistant director of the state chamber's education department, explained the program's emphasis to Upland's chamber Friday.

"It's not just hand-outs anymore, but alliance," she said.

The state chamber initiated the program in early 1984 through its newly formed education department, according to Bobbie Cox, secretary of that department in Sacramento.

Six cities, including Rancho Cucamonga, started pilot programs last year.

Speakers at the meeting said that while Upland High School's reputation is excellent, it could always be improved.

The better the education, the better the workers in the community, noted Mayor Richard Anderson.

The group's goal is to raise $100,000 for needed equipment, field trips, workshops and other programs.

China to the students," she said. "I enjoy being a part of the American Field Service program because I think it helps bring the world a little closer."

Hua is included in the first group of Chinese teachers from her province, Ningbo, to come to America.

"I've never traveled or been to the United States," she said hesitatingly, searching for the right words. "When I studied in college I never talked to foreigners. The English I know I learned from Chinese English teachers."

Hua has been in Upland for only about a month, but she's observed several differences already between American and Chinese schools.

"The classes here are smaller. We have a minimum class size of 52 students in China. Students here change classes during the day, but in China the teachers change," she said. "Students here are very active in class and they can talk to each other. This is quite different. In our country students are very quiet. They are very attentive to their course. They can raise questions and ask the teacher to explain, though."

Chinese students can't talk to each other in class except to discuss their particular lesson, she said.

Another big difference between schools is the relative freedom of expression students have on the campus.

"Students here can date," Hua said with a smile, "date" meaning holding hands and kissing on campus. "That (dating) is not done in China. Chinese students are eager to learn. My country has done its utmost, how to say, to train more useful people to make my country stronger. Students know it's their duty to make the country more beautiful and strong."

Although behavior in the classroom may differ greatly, Hua said lessons are similar.

"English is America's language, but we study literature, writing and writing composition. English in China is a foreign language," she said.

Hua begins her working day in her country at 7 a.m. and leaves for home at 5 p.m. She said she teaches two 45-minute periods and works on lesson planning the remainder of the day. At 4:30 p.m. students needing special help are tutored by teachers for the last half hour of the day.

Chinese teachers and students attend classes six days a week. They have Sunday off.

"Chinese teachers are more strict than American ones. But after classes they are very friendly. They pray with their students, talk to them and play with them. It is like parents and children," she said.

Frank Grossi of Upland, lifting his wheels off the ground at the starting line in last week's Super Bowl of Drag Racing at Firebird International Raceway in Phoenix, will be on hand to compete in the Super Stock category at the 26th annual Winternationals at the Los Angeles County Fairgrounds beginning Jan. 30.

Dragsters set for first meet

The lure of defending Top Fuel champion Don Garlits trying to better the 270 mile per hour mark will be the focus for the season opening Winternationals beginning Jan. 30 at the Los Angeles County Fairgrounds.

Traditionally the auto racing season opener, the National Hot Rod Association's 26th annual event is expected to draw a record number of entries. The finals are scheduled Feb. 2.

Garlits toyed with the 270 barrier last fall at Pomona, establishing a NHRA speed record of 268.01 at the Winston World Finals. In addition to Top Fuel, the other professional classes are Funny Car and Pro Stock.

Additionally, various area drivers will compete among the six sportsman classes. First qualifying runs are set for Jan. 30 and will continue through Saturday.

Hogan inducted into Hall

Upland resident Don Hogan was among the first five former Cal Poly Pomona athletes inducted in the school's newly created Hall of Fame last week.

Hogan, who also served as the school's head basketball coach from 1973-81, was a standout athlete in three sports for the Broncos — football, basketball and track. He was twice selected as an All America end while at the Pomona school.

Others honored Saturday night were Stan Jackson, Roger Folsom, Lorelee (Hasse) Miller and Sue Gozansky.

The good-humored Hogan, who also coached the junior varsity and served as a varsity assistant to Bob Stull, posted a 114-99 record as head coach.

School district running out of room

By Kimberly Heinrichs

As are many West Valley school districts, the Upland elementary district is rapidly running out of room.

With an upsurge of 375 students this year and as many as 600 more expected in the next two years, the district has just received two relocatable modular buildings and is laying the groundwork for a new school building on 18th Street.

"We have all the youngsters housed at the moment," Superintendent George Renworth said. "It's in the next year or two that we expect problems."

While residential growth in the city over the past decade has not affected the district before, Renworth said enrollment has just increased this year. He cited low interest loans and less expensive housing as possible factors drawing families with younger children to Upland lately.

In a report to the school board last week, Renworth said the district is beginning plans for building a new school at its 10-acre site on 18th Street.

The district has owned the land since 1970, he said. It would take about $2.5 million to finance development of the small school, which would only have about 14 classrooms compared to the usual 20 rooms.

The superintendent said he hopes to have financing plans for the project completed in a year and to have construction under way in the next year and a half.

Renworth said he is not prepared to discuss fully financing options yet, but noted that the sale or other use of another district-owned 10-acre lot on 22nd Street may be used to pay for the new school.

In the meantime, the district has obtained two relocatable units on a lease-purchase program. One is already at Citrus School, where it will serve as a classroom for a resource specialist who provides extra instruction for those needing help in basic courses. The second and larger building will serve as a regular classroom at Sierra Vista School.

The buildings will cost about $39,000 and Renworth said the district probably will use lottery money, which it hopes to receive in February or March, to pay for them.

The district also is preparing an application for a state grant for more relocatable buildings. If the Upland application is approved by the state, the district only would pay $2,000 for each building and the state would pick up the rest of the tab. "We hope that we can get at least a half a dozen portables," Renworth told the board.

However, earlier he said that Upland was probably low on the totem pole when it came to state hand-outs.

In another move to gain space, the district will move its textbook and instructional materials center from Baldy View School, where it takes up two classrooms, into a new office adjacent to the district offices on Ninth Street.

The move would leave Baldy View with two additional classrooms.
